PREFACE.

I CANNOT give this book—rapidly sketched—to the public, without thanking the many gentlemen to whom I am indebted for kindnesses and courtesies shown to me on my journey to Sweden and back. That I was happy in my travelling companions, I heartily affirm; and I hope that these will read my rough notes of our journey with some satisfaction. This journey was cheered, and made pleasant and instructive, by the attentive friendship of Count A. E. De Rosen; by the occasional society of Sir John Rennie; by the kindly-exercised influence and hospitality of Sir Edmund Lyons; by the attentions of M. Wærn; the companionship of Conrad Montgomery, and Mr. Charles H. Edmands; by the advice and assistance of Professors Retzius and Louvèn of Stockholm, and of M. Thomsen, the learned originator of the Ethnological Museum of Copenhagen.

McClure. M. W. 7-3-34

With these hearty acknowledgments, I leave my book to the judgment of the public. I have endeavoured to describe correctly my impressions of a country new to me; and without reserve or a studied adherence to the usual methods of giving a history of travels to the public, have wandered hither and thither, forgetful of the critic's iron pen. May it pass lightly over my performance!
