Life and Character of Richard P. Bland.

ADDRESS OF MR. DE ARMOND, OF MISSOURI.

Mr. SPEAKER: RICHARD PARKS BLAND was born in Kentucky, August 19, 1835, and died in Missouri, June 15, 1899. Between these lids, birth and death, are the leaves of a noble life.

BLAND reached manhood by the rough way which so many poor boys have trod. He passed a few years in the far West, among the pioneers who went to the wild mountains in search of the precious metals. In Missouri he married Virginia E. Mitchell, the devoted wife who bore him four sons and five daughters. The widow and six children survive to mourn the death of the best of husbands, the best of fathers. BLAND was a lawyer with a fair practice when he was elected to Congress. Believing that as the representative of the people he should quit his private business and devote himself wholly to the public service, he gave up the profession in which his progress had been satisfactory. Loving the country, he made his home upon a farm, and when wearied with the duties and cares of public life, there, communing with nature, he sought and found rest and recreation.

He served twelve terms, or twenty-four years, as a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, and death canceled his certificate of election for a thirteenth term. Once only was he beaten, and even then he barely missed election, although defeat overtook his party at almost every point. He was one of many vicarious atonements for the sins of others. Nominations came to him; no one else was thought of while he lived.

BLAND is most widely known through his prominent con-
