A SOLDIER IN FRANCE

*We thought we knew you in the days of old—
The days light-hearted when our hearts were free
And there was room for mirth and minstrelsy
And glory and the things men do for gold.
We knew you not! For we were unaware
Of a great tidal tumult in your soul
Until it rose and overleapt control,
And showed in splendid exaltation there
An all-consuming passion, pure as fire,
That could not let a monstrous evil go,
That could not live on earth with a great lie,
But, swept like harp-strings by the one desire,
Went out to face the intolerable foe,
And met him smiling, with no fear to die.*

FOREWORD

THIS little book is an effort to describe the experience of hundreds of thousands of Americans whose first journey to Europe is made not for pleasure, as in peace-times, but to redress a world-wide wrong.

The writer in 1915 visited England, Belgium, France, Switzerland, Malta, the Balkans and Turkey; in 1917 he went to Scotland, England and the British Front in France; in 1918 he crossed France twice from the mountains to the sea, studying the adaptation of American soldiers to their strange environment. He has shared the life of troop-ships and trains, the dugouts and the trenches, and as opportunity offered he has investigated the work of the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and other ameliorative agencies with a growing admiration for their great achievement.

Acknowledgment is due to the Public Ledger of Philadelphia, and to The Observer of London, for permission to reproduce portions of articles written for those journals.

1. The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions and activities. It emphasizes that proper record-keeping is essential for transparency and accountability, particularly in financial reporting and auditing.

2. The second part of the document outlines the various methods and techniques used to collect and analyze data. This includes both qualitative and quantitative approaches, as well as the use of statistical tools and software to process large volumes of information.

3. The third part of the document focuses on the interpretation and presentation of the collected data. It discusses how to identify trends, patterns, and anomalies, and how to communicate these findings effectively to stakeholders through reports, presentations, and other communication channels.

4. The fourth part of the document addresses the challenges and limitations of data analysis. It highlights the need for high-quality data, the potential for bias and error, and the importance of using appropriate statistical methods and assumptions.

5. The fifth part of the document provides a summary of the key findings and conclusions. It reiterates the importance of data-driven decision-making and the role of data analysis in understanding complex systems and processes.

6. The sixth part of the document offers recommendations for future research and practice. It suggests areas for further exploration, such as the development of new data analysis techniques and the integration of data analysis with other disciplines.

7. The seventh part of the document is a conclusion that summarizes the overall message of the document. It emphasizes the value of data analysis in providing insights and supporting decision-making, and encourages a continued commitment to data-driven research and practice.
