INTRODUCTION	13
CHAPTER I
The essential contradiction inherent in human life . . .	18
CHAPTER II
Humanity has recognized from the earliest days the contradiction of life. Wise men who have enlightened humanity, have given to the world definitions of life explaining this intrinsic contradiction, but the Pharisees and Scribes conceal it	31
CHAPTER III
The errors of the Scribes	36
CHAPTER IV
The doctrine of the Scribes substitutes the visible manifestation of man's animal existence for the conception of the complete life of man, and draws from these manifestations deductions as to the aim of life . . .	38
CHAPTER V
The false doctrines of the Pharisees and Scribes no more explain the true meaning of life than they give guidance in it. Custom without any reasonable explanation is the sole guide of life	42
CHAPTER VI
The division in the consciousness of the men of our time . . .	48

	PAGE
CHAPTER VII
The division of consciousness proceeds from the confusion of the animal life with the human	51
CHAPTER VIII
The division and the contradiction are only apparent: they are the consequence of false doctrine	54
CHAPTER IX
The birth of the true life in man	57
CHAPTER X
Reason is the law recognized by man, in conformity with which his life must be perfected	60
CHAPTER XI
False direction of knowledge	62
CHAPTER XII
The cause of false knowledge is the false perspective in which objects appear	67
CHAPTER XIII
The possibility of understanding objects increases not in proportion to their manifestation in time and space, but rather by reason of the unity of the law governing the objects we are studying, and ourselves	70
CHAPTER XIV
The true human life is not that which is lived in time and space	76
CHAPTER XV
The renunciation of the well-being of the animal individuality is the law of human life	80
CHAPTER XVI
The animal individuality is the instrument of life	84
CHAPTER XVII
Birth by the Spirit	86

CHAPTER XVIII
The demands of the reasonable consciousness	88
CHAPTER XIX
Confirmation of the demands of the reasonable consciousness	92
CHAPTER XX
The demands of the individuality appear incompatible with those of the reasonable consciousness	96
CHAPTER XXI
What is required is not renunciation of our individuality but the subjugation of individuality to the reasonable consciousness	99
CHAPTER XXII
The feeling of love is the manifestation of the activity of the individuality subjected to the reasonable consciousness	104
CHAPTER XXIII
The manifestation of the feeling of love is impossible to men who do not understand the meaning of their life	108
CHAPTER XXIV
True love is a consequence of the renunciation of the welfare of the individuality	115
CHAPTER XXV
Love is the sole and complete activity of the true life	120
CHAPTER XXVI
The efforts of men, directed to the impossible amelioration of their existence, deprive them of the possibility of living the one true life	123
CHAPTER XXVII
The fear of death is only the consciousness of the unsolved contradiction of life	126

CHAPTER XXVIII
Carnal death destroys the body limited in space and the consciousness limited in time, but cannot destroy that which constitutes the foundation of life: the special relationship of each being to the world	131
CHAPTER XXIX
Men fear death because they have restricted life by their false conception, taking a part of life to be the whole	138
CHAPTER XXX
Life is a relationship to the world. The movement of life is the establishment of new and loftier relationships, hence death is the introduction to a new relationship	142
CHAPTER XXXI
The life of men when they are dead does not cease in this world	145
CHAPTER XXXII
The dread of death proceeds from man's confusion of his different relationships to the world	151
CHAPTER XXXIII
The visible life is a part of the infinite movement of life	156
CHAPTER XXXIV
The incomprehensibility of the sufferings of earthly existence proves to man more convincingly than anything that his life is not that of the individuality which begins at birth and ends at death	161
CHAPTER XXXV
Physical sufferings constitute an indispensable condition of the life and welfare of men	171
