THE AUTHOR.

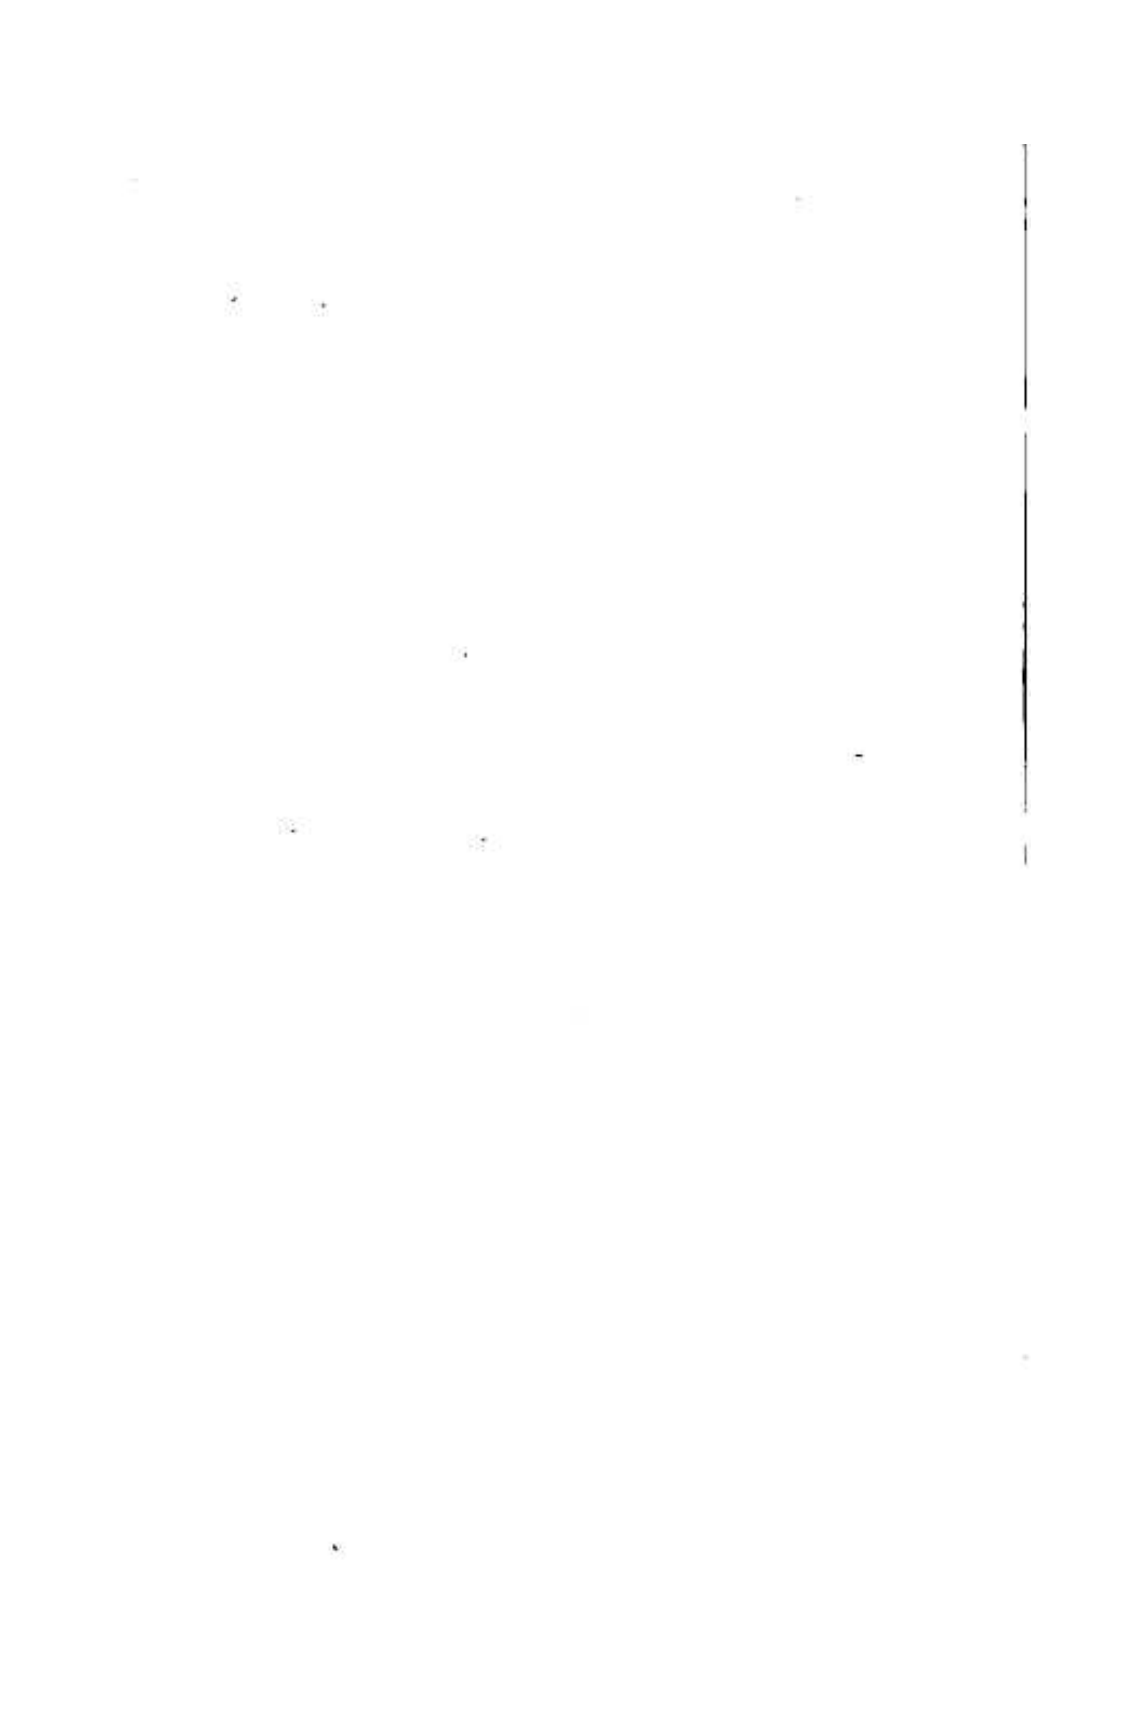

PREFACE.

THE origin of the publication of these sermons was the following:—Members of the congregation amongst whom I am privileged to minister had often asked me to put some of my sermons in print. A friend, to whom I dedicate them, and whom I had the pleasure of meeting after a long interval, suggested to me that it would be well to accede to this request, because, notwithstanding the multitudes of superior discourses which pass through the press, a sermon of one known to the reader is generally read with more interest. Two previously published having had a rather large circulation, were, I have reason to believe, the means of doing some good. Hence I have selected a few which struck me as practical, and should they be blest to the awakening, instruction, or comfort of but one soul, I shall rejoice.

I humbly venture to make one request of the reader, that he will not read the first sermon without reading the second, which is meant to be its continuation.

W. H. DENNY.
