PREFACE.

MY DEAR LITTLE READERS,—

HOPE we are old acquaintances enough to be able to shake hands at meeting; and if we have not met before, let us do so, in the hope of many future gossips. I am very proud to own so many little friends, for I must call you all so, even if we have never seen or spoken to each other. For I love children dearly,—a love inherited, I may say, from my father, who was a great friend and crony with many little folks, now grown up into men and women. I have also a little public of my own—some young people, child critics—who read and make remarks on all my books; and I like to flatter myself
