CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

	PAGE
Definition of the term infinitesimal—Its application to homœopathic remedies—Objection of the old school physician to the physiological test in the case of infinitesimals—Homœopathist's right to appeal to such a test—Remarks of Herschel on physical inquiry—Doctrine of infinitesimals an obstacle to the investigation of homœopathy—Unexplained phenomena should not be pronounced absurd; investigation is necessary—Andral's experiments at La Pitie	9

CHAPTER II.

Two leading objections to the doctrine of infinitesimals—Dr. Taylor and the Emeturet poisoning case—Dr. Sharp's letter to Dr. Taylor—Question of the divisibility of matter—Examples of the divisibility of matter—Matter in relation to force—Opinions of Cuvier, Sir William Armstrong, &c.	15
---	----

CHAPTER III.

Physiological changes in accordance with natural laws—Homœopathic practice full of instances of such changes—Testimony of allopathic writers on the subject of small doses—Watson, Barker, Hufeland—Specific medicines—Drs. Pereira and Christison—Dr. A. S. Taylor—Boerhaave—Dynamical action of medicines—Hufeland, Pereira	25
---	----

CHAPTER IV.

	PAGE
Evidence of the scientific status of infinitesimals gathered from the writings of allopathists—Theory of the possible action of infinitesimals, by Daubeny—Examples of catalytic force—Prout's merorganization theory—Trousseau on small doses—Remarks by Dr. Joslin—Döppler's theory—Mayerhöfer's experiments—Dr. Addison on abnormal cell-growths—Virchow's evidence in favour of infinitesimals—Dr. John Fletcher's theory of the action of homœopathic remedies in infinitesimal doses—Remarks by Dr. Dudgeon on Dr. Clotar Müller's theory of cures—John Hunter—Mr. Lawrence on the modus operandi of a medicine—Anxiety of the homœopathist to obtain from his opponents a careful examination of his system of healing	35

CHAPTER V.

Expectancy—Curious methods of attenuating drugs—Hippocrates—Democritus—Bernard le Provincial—Salernus—Bielke—Louis XI and Coytier—Dr. Locock—Labourdette's method of giving medicine through the milk of animals—Discussion in the French Academy—Remarks by Chatin, Trousseau, and Bouley—Injustice to Hahnemann—His philosophic method of attenuation—Fronomus the lute player	53
--	----

CHAPTER VI.

Evidence in favour of infinitesimals, derived from natural phenomena—Poisonous action of minute portions of matter—Miasmata—When a poison is infinitesimal, a susceptibility of the organism is necessary to its full action—Virchow's views on this subject—Examples of susceptibility—Casper Hauser—Perfumes—Evidence of Sir James Clarke—Orfila—Dr. Pereira on Ipecacuanha—Cases by Dr. Elliotson—
---	--

Dr. King—Laennec—Argument in favour of the curative power of infinitesimals, based upon their known poisonous effects—Prophylactic action of unmeasurable proportions of matter—Kirchoff and Bunsen—Dr. Robertson—Rev. J. E. Elden—M. Chatin—Contest between the powers of life and death—Prophylactic interference . . .	57
---	----

CHAPTER VII.

Natural infinitesimal therapeutic agents—Mineral waters—Analogues of the homoeopathic preparations—Dr. Durand Fardel's lecture on hydrology—Definition of mineral waters—Loss of thermality attended by a loss of therapeutic power—Discovery of new substances in water—The condition of minerals in medicinal springs not understood—Solvent power of mineral waters—Penetrated by gases—Physiological action not in accordance with their known properties—Dr. Fardel's reference to existing theories—The existence in mineral waters of natural analogues of homoeopathic preparations—Aggravation of symptoms—Remarks by Patissier, Lec, Van Ammon, and Dr. Andrien—Action of some mineral waters not in accordance with the usual physiological effects of their ingredients—Remarks by Fardel, Lec, Patissier, Page, Granville—Difference of action caused by the presence of some unknown ingredient, existing in infinitesimal quantities—Physiological tests may yet discover it—Dr. Wilkinson and the Cheltenham water—M. Grimaud on insufficiency of chemistry in observations on mineral waters—Probable detection of the secret agents of therapeutic springs by the spectroscope—Discovery of hitherto unknown and unsuspected bodies in water—Mode by which waters may have become impregnated with organic and inorganic matters—Lyell—Doses of mineral ingredients of a water superior in efficacy to common medicines—Observations by Dr. Gardner and Dr. Lee—Waters of Mont d'Or—Thenard's analyses

—Presence of arsenic in the waters of Mont d'Or, Plombières, Vichy, Bussong, Provins, Pyrmont, Ems, Wiesbaden—
Effects of mineral waters due to trituration, and affinity for the diseased organism—As thermal waters cool they lose power—Probably caused by the precipitation, of a body insoluble in cold water—Causes of thermality—Influence of heat and pressure on solution—Müller's observations—Silica and boric acid vaporizable by heat—Solvent power of mineral waters—Nature's mighty operations—Hahnemann's method of attenuation—Solution of flint—Dr. Lee and Dr. Struve on artificial waters—States in which Silica exists in waters	67

CHAPTER VIII.

Explanation of the causes of the apparent difference between the compounds of mineral waters and those of the laboratory—Trituration—Homœopathicity—Aid afforded by morbid susceptibility—Smallness of the dose secures the primary effect—Reasons why homœopathic medicines differ in their effects from the same substances, chemically speaking—Presence of antidotes or equally potentized ingredients do not overcome the strong affinity between the active ingredient of a water and the diseased organism	91
