THESE short Sermons were written in the hope of supplying a want in the religious literature of the day. There is a difficulty, which most parents must have felt, in finding readings for their children on the leading points of the Christian Faith, at once cheerful yet improving, solemn yet simple. As these Sermons appear to me to fulfil the requirements I mention, I have not hesitated to recommend their publication. The poetical cast of some of the thoughts and phrases will not, I think, be found an objection by those who are accustomed to deal with the minds of children. I am inclined to believe, on the contrary, that some degree of imagery is necessary, or at least useful, in leading them to consider seriously the doctrines of their Faith.

In the hope that these little Sermons may have this good effect, I commend them to the Divine blessing.

W. P.

The writer of the Sermons is the Author of the "Discipline of Life," and other works of fiction.
