PREFATORY NOTE

OF the peculiar responsibility that the Christian Church faces in these days of readjustment and reconstruction, the Baptists of the Northern States have their full share. These responsibilities are indeed emphasized, if not increased, by the changes which we have recently made in our organization, and as a result of which we enter into closer co-operation than before in the accomplishment of our denominational task.

It was with these things in mind that this volume of essays and addresses was planned and undertaken. Loving our denomination and earnestly desiring that it shall do its full duty in this hour of peril-fraught opportunity, we offer this volume to our brethren in the hope that, in some small measure at least, it may contribute to that knowledge of the history of our religion and that apprehension of its essential elements which are needed to enable us to interpret this time and serve our generation as our fathers served theirs.

Most of the chapters of this book were written especially for publication in it. The few which were originally delivered as public addresses, though bearing the marks of their special occasion, have lost none of their significance by the lapse of time since their delivery.
