PART II.

ANTISEPTIC TREATMENT OF DISEASES WHICH BELONG TO INTERNAL PATHOLOGY.

PLAN AND DIVISION.

In this Second Part it is my intention to indicate, in connection with the consideration of each disease in particular, the methods of treatment and formulæ which belong to the antiseptic therapeutics of these diseases. Passing lightly over therapeutic procedures to-day abandoned, or which seem to give only uncertain results, I shall attempt to give the methods that yield the best results, and particularly such as are preferred by our best authorities in the hospitals of Paris and actually employed in their daily practice.

I hardly need say that the antiseptic treatment should be supplemented, according to the indications, by eusthenic or hypnotic remedies, conformably to the division of medicaments into three great classes which I have previously indicated. As a general rule, I shall consider here only the antiseptic treatment properly so-called.
