This Tract is a reprint of one published in London, and printed by Joseph Downing, printer to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, A.D. 1727. In the Preface to the original, it is said that many of the circumstances and sayings which occur in this collection, are taken out of letters which work written by the Martyrs themselves; the originals of which are now to be found in the library of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. Reference is also made, in the original tract, to a volume (with a Preface of the pious and learned Coverdale), printed by John Day, A.D. 1564; and to the "Diptychs or Tragical Registries of the Persecution under the reign of Philip and Mary."

London, 1852.

THOMAS BILNEY.

THOMAS BILNEY, called by some the Apostle of Cambridge, was converted from the Popish superstitions by his reading of the New Testament in Latin, translated by Erasmus; which he procured, and was desirous to read, because of the great name of Erasmus, for his skill in the Latin tongue.

He had scarce (as he says in one of his letters) cast his eye on the book, but he perceived such inward comfort, by applying the text to his own condition, that his reading began to be more pleasant to him than honey or the honeycomb. He says, that he then learned that the exercises of an austere life, and absolution, &c. could not be effectual to a Christian in his warfare, but through a true belief in Christ: that if this condition were wanting, his pains and
