PREFACE.

IN SUBMITTING this little volume of collected Poems to the judgment of those who may care to honour them by a glance, I may perhaps be allowed to mention that they were for the most part written in India, in an atmosphere and under conditions by no means congenial to effort in the field of imagination. I am at the same time well aware that I have no right to claim or to expect any indulgence either from the critic or the reader on that account.

The present edition comprises, in addition to 775470

'Delhi and other Poems' and 'The World's Martyrs' (originally published separately in India), some pieces hitherto unpublished, and some which have previously appeared in the 'Calcutta Review' and 'Englishman.'

C. A. KELLY.
