THE PREFACE.

This book continues the careful grading and wide variety which have characterized the earlier books in the series. It takes the pupil over a large field of the best literature, presenting as it does characteristic selections from fifty-five English and American authors. Many of the selections are suitable for declamation and have an historical interest which will prepare the pupil for the study of American history, which often begins in this grade. A number of the selections are informational in character and new to school readers. These will have a freshness for both teacher and pupil.

Every effort should be made to secure intelligent and enthusiastic reading. Have the pupil read for the thought rather than for the words. Be sure that he knows and feels what he is reading. Remember that reading is thinking.

The publishers acknowledge the kindness of several prominent teachers who have given them, in the preparation of the text, the benefit of long professional experience.

The selections from Holmes, Parson, Whittier, and Lucy Larcom are used by permission of, and special arrangement with, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., publishers of the works of the authors named.

For the use of other valuable copyrighted matter, thanks are extended to the American Publishing Company, The Bowen-Merrill Company, J. B. Lippincott Company, A. C. McClurg & Co., Armand Hawkins, A. Pope, and Miss Anna Gordon.

The publishers are also under obligations to John Burroughs, Chauncey M. Depew, and Henry Watterson, for permission to use extracts from their works.
