FOR the separate publication of the following Discourses in a commodious form no apology seems requisite. Their distinguished merit has entitled them to a place among the Select Sermons of the Author lately published by the UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD: and surely it may not unreasonably be expected that a wide circulation of them will tend to confirm and increase, in well-disposed minds, the influence of Industry, "the mother, the nurse, and the guardian of all virtues," and even infuse some portion of her salutary spirit where unhappily it may not already prevail. A farther good may possibly arise : the manner in which the subject is treated may induce the Reader to cultivate an acquaintance with other Discourses of the Author, from an attentive perusal of which he cannot rise without advantage and improvement. If these effects should in any degree result from the present little volume, the Publishers will have just reason to reflect with satisfaction on having brought it forward.

In order to simplify the work, and adapt it for general use, it has been thought advisable to omit the scriptural authorities, and occasional quotations from Greek and Latin authors. The substance of the passages referred to, if not the very mode of expression, is in all cases adopted by the author; and to have inserted them in this manual, might probably have had the effect of deterring some classes of readers from a perusal of it, and by others might have been considered, for any practical purpose, as unnecessarily encumbering the text.
