FOREWORD

TO THE CLASS OF EIGHTY-SIX:

In the absence of our honored Class Secretary, who is enjoying abroad a well-earned vacation of several months, it becomes my pleasant duty to present the following report of our Twenty-fifth Reunion. It is thought that a permanent record of the celebration will not be unwelcome to those of the Class who were present at the Reunion. My regret is that such an account as this must, of necessity, fail to give to those of you who were not present an adequate idea of the abounding good fellowship which made the Reunion a success.

I trust that I may be pardoned for taking advantage of my editorship to sign these prefatory words with an autograph which the intelligent engraver of last year's report rejected as unprintable. The signature he wrote for me was doubtless legible, but it was not my own.

Your Classmate,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read "Mr. J. W. H. [unclear]". The signature is written in a cursive style with a prominent flourish at the end.

BOSTON, June 12, 1912.
