SOME PRESS OPINIONS

SPECTATOR.—"The Life is an excellent one, judicious and trustworthy, far above the average of the hasty impressionist portraits so often printed of modern great men."

TIMES.—"If it be the test of a good biography that it must explain to us how the essential feature of a man's character originated, and how it remained essential to the end, then certainly these two large volumes come with ample credit out of the ordeal."

TRIBUNE.—"His life was broken up into sections, well defined both by place and time, and his chief mental characteristic was breadth—breadth such as needs the point of view of more than one writer for its due portrayal."

The Memoirs of Archbishop Temple, by Seven Friends, has already passed through three impressions since its publication a year ago, and is still available. In order, however, to bring the Archbishop's Life, at least in outline, before a wider circle of readers, it has been decided to issue, next autumn, the Editor's Supplement in a separate volume, with a short Introduction designed to make the whole a complete story.

But it is also felt that the Rugby Memoir has a special interest of its own for many readers. To old Rugbeians of Temple's time, to those who are interested in the history of the great School, and to all who care for education, it has a value of its own. Moreover, it abounds in human interest, which is necessarily less prominent in the records of work at the Education Office, or of the administration of Dioceses. Dr. Temple was just over thirty-six years old when he went to Rugby ; he was at the very height of all his powers of mind and body. A Headmastership is necessarily an episode in a man's life that is complete in itself ; and in the case of a great Headmaster it is a well-defined epoch in the history of the school. For these reasons it has been thought well to issue this Memoir separately.
