CONTENTS

CHAPTER I.

His wonderful variety of work—Compared with Stanton—His official capacity in its growth—A prosecuting attorney at nineteen—When it paid to refuse a good salary—Little private life from the first—Foraker's appointment to a judgeship—His first victory at the polls—His coming to Washington—His memorable labor decisions—Appointed by McKinley to the Presidency of the Philippine Commission—Ambition for Supreme Bench—Friends sceptical of success in Philippines—Twice declined appointment to Supreme Court—Entered the cabinet in 1903 and has been "home to the folks" twice since.

CHAPTER II.

First personal impression—Taft did not want advertising—Smiling five thousand into smiles—Manner in public speaking—Reviewing troops though ill—Collapse after work was done—A picture he rather liked—Alleviating a major's stage fright—The major's revenge—A blase man's praise—Taft's bigness shown in lack of annoyance over little things—A story to save the day—Never studied traveling—It is second nature—Progress without pomp—Likes no special privileges over other passengers—Gives a reasonable tip but never a big one.

CHAPTER III.

The summer family reunion—The foregathering at Murray Bay, Canada—An old frame house—Bits of ornamentation from the Philippines—Six days in flannels and one in blue serge—Goes to the Union Church on Sunday—A week day of dictating, golf, and departmental work—Devoid of false pride—The baby-raising days—Hucksters mingling with insular matters—Charlie and the bread-crumbs smile—Taft's avidity for exercise—An epigram on suicide.

CHAPTER IV.

Sporting companions must train to keep up—Justice Harlan on the links—Home-made seismic disturbances—A story at Harlan's expense—Balls and badinage—The tale of a subsidized caddie—Golfing in the Philippines—At the Devil's Bath Tub—The Silver tip bears—Charlie and the mule—Charlie and the fish-cooking trick.

CHAPTER V.

Opinions from the crowd—The good-natured giant—Climbing ventilators—Making friends below decks—The birthday celebration—Gifts on the breakfast table—The Pete Robinson story—The Captain's dinner in Taft's honor—Charlie discovers an extra birthday of his own—The Captain's calendar-license joke—Charlie's victory—Taft has never been sea-sick—The aboard-ship schedule is strenuous—Is mostly muscle—Work in quantity disposed of—Hard on his secretarial staff—Filling a number on a concert program.

CHAPTER VI.

The family of the public man—Taft takes his family with him—Helen Taft in Bryn Mawr—Robert Taft in Yale—Taft and Friendship—Without servants—Not even a maid for Mrs. Taft—Charlie's facility for losing himself—Stealing boys' hats—Trouble in Moscow—Fishing in the royal lake—Studying geography in a most practical fashion.

CHAPTER VII.

Taft's tour a peace commission—Making friends in Japan—Speeches around the world breathed spirit of true Americanism—Dramatic intensity of Tokio Speech—The effect on the Japanese—The speech in detail—Unafraid to talk of war.

CHAPTER VIII.

Taft and the Open Door in China—Taft has shown there was no bluff in the famous Hay doctrine—Opening the new building of the Y. M. C. A., Shanghai—His speech—Relation of Philippines to China—American trade in China—Inviolability of Chinese territory and open trade must be preserved.

CHAPTER IX.

McKinley appointed Taft on first hand knowledge of his ability—Praise from Roosevelt—Filippine problems—The friars and the friars' lands—Aguinaldo and the revolution—Fuson's capture of Aguinaldo—Guerrilla warfare—The power of the local leader.

CHAPTER X.

Spanish friars blazed the way for Americans—Taft's belief that the Filipinos will govern themselves well ultimately—Too soon for independence—The great problem of the Orient—Filipino education—Sanitation in Manila—Improvements made—Plans for the future—The school system—Some practical political education.

CHAPTER XI.

Taft is an irrepressible optimist—Acknowledges the necessity of material pursuits—These should not absorb all endeavor—Our national wealth is the result of effort, not luck—Young men of wealth should turn to public affairs—England's leisure class that engages in public service—Never such opportunities—Interest keen in colleges on insular matters.

CHAPTER XII.

Taft and the laboring man—He has been misrepresented and misunderstood in his attitude toward labor—His courageous appearance before a Socialistic audience at Cooper Union—Record of his labor decisions when on the bench—The American Railway Union case—Taft's triumph before the unfriendly crowd—Some of the questions.

CHAPTER XIII.

Taft and the missionary movement—His speech to the Laymen at Carnegie Hall—Foreign missions in the Philippines—Roman Catholics and Protestants—The Missionary in China—The Boxer Uprising—The Hardships of Missionaries.

CHAPTER XIV.

The crisis in Cuba in 1906—Taft is sent by Roosevelt to quell the revolution—Proclamation to the people of Cuba—Horrors of civil war averted—Grand demonstration on the part of the grateful people—Expressions of gratitude from Americans in Cuba—Cuban patriots eminently satisfied with the result.

CHAPTER XV.

Taft's American genealogy—All his ancestors for several generations were Americans—Blood will tell—Many notable men in the list of Taft's progenitors—The Taft home in Ohio—His father as a federal judge—The neighborhood feud of Taft's boyhood—Taft's father a stern peacemaker—The immediate family and connections—Taft and his books—Yale freshman at seventeen—Graduated as salutatorian or second in his large class—Returned to Cincinnati to practice law.
