EDITOR'S PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION

volcano at Washington, aroused and directed by the evil spirit that reins there, is belching forth the lava of political corruption in a current broad and deep, which is sweeping with-frightful velocity over the whole length and breadth of the land, bidding fair to leave unscathed no green spot or living thing. . . . Here, without contemplating consequences, before high heaven and in the face of the world, I swear eternal fidelity to the just cause as I deem it, of the land of my life, my liberty and my love. Let none falter who thinks he is right."

From these words we may surely conclude that Abraham Lincoln, had he known the "New Philosophy of Money," would have championed it with the same energy with which he opposed monometalism. May they inspire hearts as brave, honest and sincere as his, to push this, our propoganda, which is the only first step toward a prosperity that shall be beneficial to all alike.

MAUD DENNING WESTRUP.

CONTENTS

Preface	7
Introduction	9
A Synopsis of the Philosophy of Money herein presented.
General Effect of the Artificial Limit to the Volume of Money	19
The effect, in case facilities are provided for an abundant supply of money contrasted with that resulting from the existing artificial limit—The present money a makeshift, not the result of provision for a medium of exchange—The business people, and not money-lenders should make provision for a medium of exchange, pure and simple—Interest in such a medium is universal.
Exchange	24
The indispensability of money—Who should provide it—An all cash system; hence book credits abolished and bad debts avoided—The Mutual Credit System irresistible—Will defeat all opposition.
Not Enough Money	28
Money being artificial, its supply can be increased—It results in a credit system that is destitute of principle—A matter of guesswork—Its supply by banks a matter of favoritism and uncertainty, engendering false pretense and defeating honesty—The relation of volume of money to prosperity, justice and morality—The supply of money—Postponing pay-day—The transferability of secured and unsecured credit—The substitution of the former for the latter.
Too Much Money	32
The most perfect elasticity under the Mutual Credit System—Neither too much nor too little—Inflation—The gold redemption superstition—The abandonment of all commodity money a necessity—Establishment of a credit money system indispensable to progress.
Cheap Money	35
A review and criticism of articles published in the "Century Magazine."
The "Per Capita" Delusion	39
The Treasury Report on circulation unreliable—Thirty-five dollars per capita, but only one dollar in circulation for every thirty-two dollars of wealth—Interest of borrowers and the community not served by the per capita theory.

Credit 41

Importance of correct definitions and their mutual acceptance—Several new definitions—Secured and unsecured credit—Advantages of the former—Credit money and commodity money—Exchanges with the latter are barter—Paper money (secured credit) better than book credits (unsecured credit)—The prevalence of the latter the result of sheer ignorance—Quotation from "Mutual Banking."

Cost 47

Ruskin's definition of cost—Josiah Warren, cost and true civilization—Cost defined—Capitalism and the Mutual Credit System—Cost should be the limit of price.

Value 48

Market or exchangeable value defined—Exchangeable value expressed by means of a conventional monetary unit, an abstraction—Utility value defined—Utility value without exchangeable value—Monopoly and value.

Competition 50

A criticism of the "Twentieth Century," definition—The present economic system not "the competitive system"—Legal tender a means of enslaving the people—Control of money the basis of monopoly—Defeats competition—Quotation from "Instead of a Book"—The "Twentieth Century's" blunder—Foot-note from "Special Legislation the Bane of Agriculture."

Usury—Interest 56

The Bible doctrine of usury—Its inequity susceptible of mathematical demonstration—The ethics of interest—The obtaining of something for nothing—"Great financiers" and political economists silent on this point—A startling calculation.

"We Must Have Government" 60

An unphilosophical proposition—Man's ignorance, hypocrisy and audacity—The consequent penalties—Humiliating—The beginning of wisdom—A thesis of Democracy—Philistines and foot-pads—Commentaries for paternalists and moralists—We must have government, a superstition—What does history prove?—Ignorance the cause—The Anarchistic philosophy—Opposed to the methods of force—Definitions of anarchy—Burke's dictum—Anarchists versus the abettors of the methods of force—Inexcusable perversion of fact—
