PREFACE.

THE writer of the following Poems is no more.—Criticism therefore is disarmed, and these lines must be regarded, rather as Memorials of the departed, than as the effusions of a strong and vigorous intellect, which panted for virtuous distinction, and cherished high aspirations.

By a large circle of Friends these tales will, I am sure, be read with affectionate interest;—by me they will ever be valued in remembrance of one, who, under circumstances of a peculiarly trying nature, proved herself a truly high-minded woman, and an excellent wife.

To the Subscribers to her work, my dear Wife always expressed herself deeply grateful for the readiness with which they assisted her in presenting to the Public the first productions of her muse.—Had her life been spared, and had she been encouraged to persevere, I feel assured her subsequent compositions would have been still more worthy of a favourable reception, and would have done more ample justice to her varied knowledge and talents.

Some apology is due for the length of time which has elapsed since the announcement of the Volume.—The delay has arisen from many interruptions which were unavoidable, and from the pressure of domestic duties.

JOHN H. CHARNOCK.
