TO MY BROTHER FISHERMEN.

IT has been a great gratification to me to find that, during my connexion with the public press as a piscatory correspondent, my work has been of some little value to those who, in search of fishing quarters within an easy journey of their homes, have from time to time referred to the columns of "Bell's Life" in search of reliable information, in which journal much of the subject-matter of these pages has been already published.

My thanks are due to the proprietors of the journal in question for permission to republish papers which had already passed into their hands; and now, at the solicitation of many friends whom I have met from time to time while wandering, rod in hand, in quest of sport, I place them before the general angling public, together with copious additions and corrections to what had been originally written.

Many faults may be found, many imperfections, but, dedicating my little book to my brothers of the angle (and desiring no more powerful patron), I leave it, with hopes for its success, in their hands.

J. P. WHEELDON.
