PREFACE.

IN presenting the Fourth Reader of this series to the public, the publishers desire to restate the features recited in the preface to their Third Reader. In addition to the continued suggestion and designation of Supplementary Reading, the Memory Exercises, Exercises in Oral and Written Expression, Vocal Training, and Phonic Analysis, which mark, in a special manner, the preceding books of the series, the place given to American Biography cannot fail to be noticed with approval.

The interest of the young in history, lies, chiefly, in the lives of great men, and the publishers have, therefore, especial pleasure in presenting numerous sketches of distinguished characters, accompanied by portraits carefully engraved from the best originals which could be procured.

Extracts conveying useful information in attractive forms continue also to be a feature of the series.

Through the courtesy of Roberts Brothers, of Boston, and G. P. Putnam's Sons, D. Appleton & Co., and the Century Co., of New York, they are also enabled to present choice selections from American authors on a great variety of subjects, adapted to those for whom this book is designed.

The selections from the writings of Longfellow, Whittier, Holmes, Lowell, Aldrich, Bayard Taylor, Saxe, Trowbridge, and other writers whose works they publish, are used by permission of, and by special arrangement with, Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.
