PREFACE.

THE first notes from which the following pages have been written appeared in the Allahabad Pioneer, in 1873, under the same title as at present. They are written from the journal kept en route. Although they contain very little, if any, addition to geographical knowledge, owing to my not having been able to carry any instruments, still I hope they may be received by all brother travellers, notwithstanding all defects, with the indulgence due to a first effort to add to the knowledge of a country interesting to most Englishmen. The matter from the columns of the Pioneer was subsequently printed as a pamphlet in 1874, which accounts for the Notes at the end.

The Crimean War was the many Englishmen. magical touch by which the whole country was illuminated. The bustle of Western Europe invaded the peaceful realms of the East, and imparted to fatalistic Islam that animation which so little suited The Bay of Scutari, with the old hospital and burial-ground to the right hand, and the domed and glittering pinnacled city to the left, were still in their remembered places. But what a change had come over the country! Nothing enlivened the scene, and the city appeared to have lost its splendour. On landing, everything seemed changed-for the better I must allow; but the street tramways did not seem to be in keeping with the traditions of the city. As it is not my intention to give an account of what is so well known already, let me proceed to notice only a few of the things that struck me most.

The Turk of the present age is a vastly different man to his long-robed, staid, and venerable fore-fathers. Now clad in the garments of the West, it is hardly possible in many cases to distinguish him from the Italian or Greek Levantines. In his religious duties, too, he shows great laxity; is beginning to look on the Frank as less of a dog than formerly.
