PART II

CHICAGO
The University of Chicago Press
1904

To the Trustees of the University of Chicago:

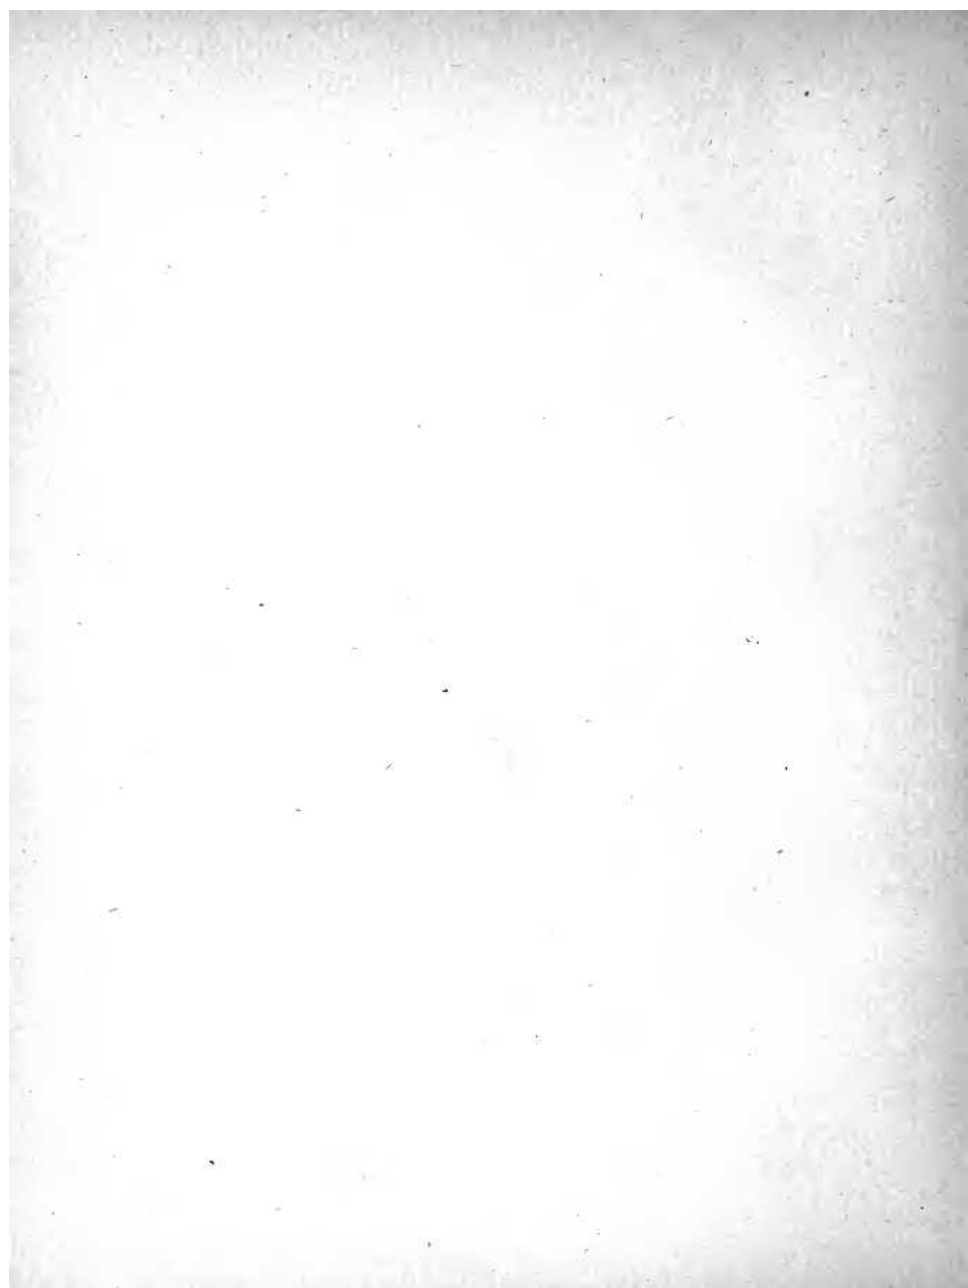

I SUBMIT herewith, as a part of the Decennial Report of the President, the accompanying list of the publications of the members of the University, printed for convenience as a separate volume. The work of gathering and preparing the material and seeing the volume through the press has been performed by the Editorial Committee of the Faculty which has had charge of the Decennial Publications as a whole.

The aim has been to include the publications, from 1892 to 1902 inclusive, of all present and former members of the University staff, issued during the term of their connection with the University, including all contributions to the Decennial Publications, and of all Graduate Students issued while in residence. All students have been added who have received from the University (down to October, 1902) the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, with the title of their theses even when still unpublished. The regulations of the University require the publication of Doctors' theses within one year after the conferring of the degree; but it has been found impossible always to enforce this regulation within the time limit. It was thought, however, that a thesis soon to be published might legitimately be regarded as a part of the work of a Department, and that a complete list of the Doctors and their subjects would in itself be a useful thing. But unpublished theses are always so designated. So far as possible the present positions of the Doctors of the University are also given, as well as of former members of the Faculties who now hold academic or professional positions. The date in square brackets after the name indicates the term of service of present and former members of the Faculties; the dates after the names of Doctors, the year of receiving the degree. The explanation should be added that the School of Education, the Law School, and the Medical School were organized either towards the end of the decennium or at its close; this bibliography includes, therefore, only the Departments embraced under the Faculties of Arts, Literature, Science, and Theology.

The bibliography is divided into two parts. Part I, "Departmental," is intended to include the publications which fall more especially within the lines of activity of a person as member of a departmental staff. The attempt has been made to insert under this head only such books, articles, and reviews as may be thought to have something more than an ephemeral value. The character of the medium of publication was here often the only guide. Some inequality in the selection of this material has naturally been unavoidable; the authors themselves are in the main responsible for the manner in which the Committee's instructions in this regard have been carried out. Brief abstracts, often rather in the nature of expanded titles, have been given in this Part so far as possible, that the lists might thereby gain in interest and value for the non-specialist. Part II, "Literary, Educational, Miscellaneous," requires little explanation. Elementary or secondary text books have been entered here, while reviews and newspaper articles have been omitted altogether. In some cases items which reached the editors too late to be included in Part I have been added here.

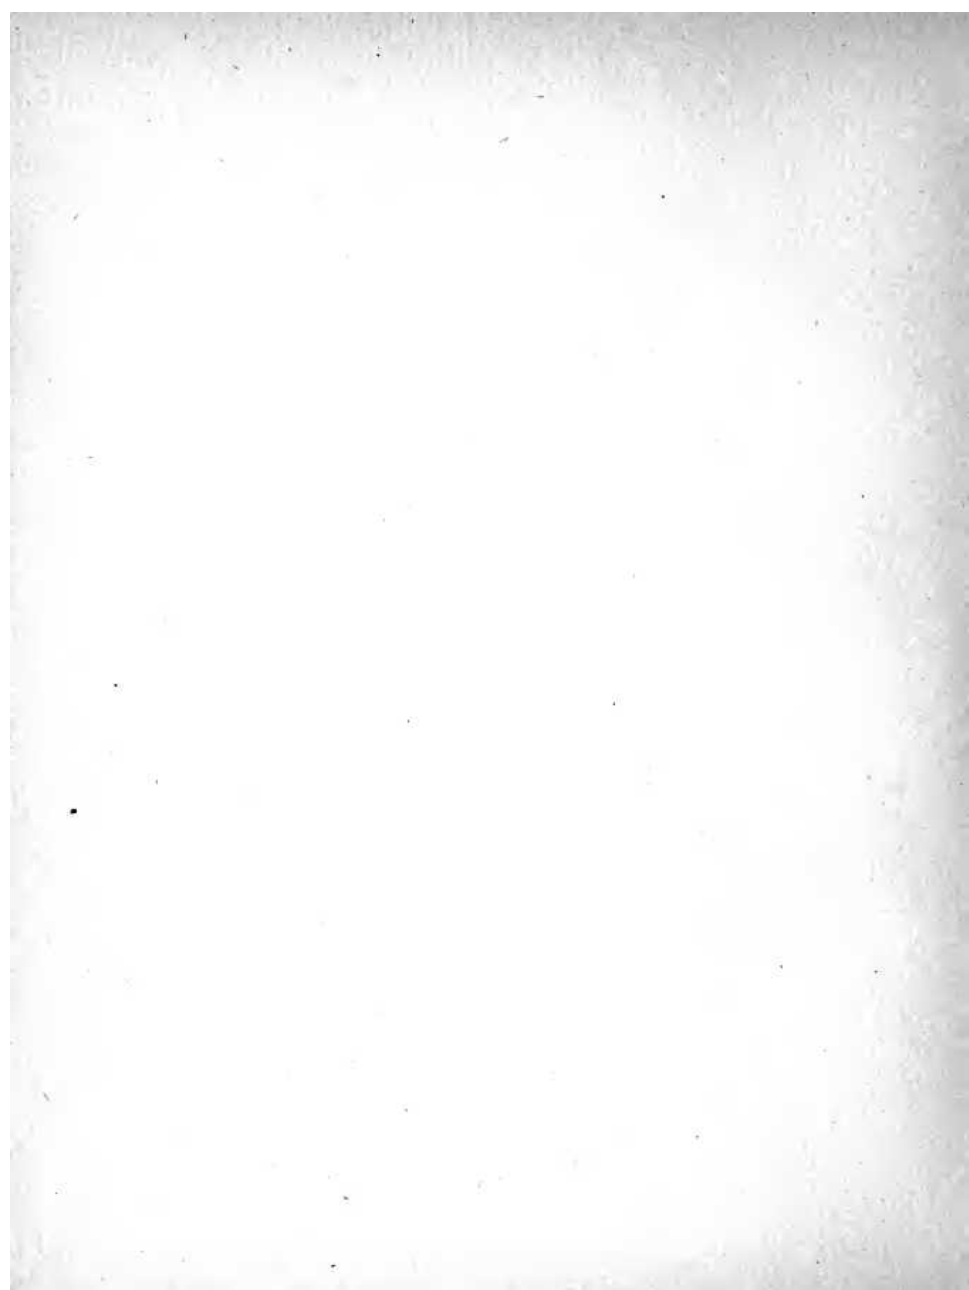

I desire to express to the Editorial Committee my great appreciation of the important service rendered in the preparation of this volume.

WILLIAM R. HARPER, President.
