The only apology the author feels justified in making for this printing of these verses is that he is often called on to furnish copies of one or more of these compositions. Most of them have appeared in print before, and the first poem in the collection had the fortune to be selected by the editor of the "Ladies' Home Journal" as one among a few poems commended as the best Christmas poems. One of the other poems was printed and circulated by a clergyman who heard it recited, at his own expense. So that whether he would or not the author has had a certain introduction to a limited public and finds an occasional demand it is not in human nature to be unwilling to meet. A few notes are appended to the collection which it is hoped will have some interest for the reader of the poems to which they refer.
