I AM well aware that some of the contents of this little volume are merely fragments which I have found among papers connected with the more serious labours of a busy life, and that many of them are only of interest to those who belong to our Alma Mater, but it has long been my wish to collect the verses written at various times by my father. His many Carthusian friends have so often been kind enough to express interest in these results of their old Headmaster's "banco" hours, that it is with a sure confidence of their cordial reception that I now venture, with his permission, to publish them. I have purposely omitted those translations which have already appeared in Sertum Carthusianum.
