PREFACE

MY apologies are due to many schools for not having included them in my account of experiments; but it has been impossible to do more than take specimens here and there of the endless number of experiments going on.

I thank the editors of Child Life and of Women's Employment for permission to make use of some of my articles. I give my warmest thanks to Mr. Edmond Holmes, who has most kindly helped me both by his advice and by looking through the type-script; to Miss K. M. Clarke for her help in Chapter III; to the two friends who have contributed descriptions of experiments, and to the many long-suffering heads of schools who have endured both my visits to their schools and my accounts of them. Owing to delay in publication, some schools may feel that the accounts of experiments are not quite up to date, but, as many other schools will go through similar experiences, it is hoped that these accounts will prove helpful.
