Prefatory Note.

THE author offers this volume, the second of the series of Missionary Memorials, as a further contribution to the biographical literature of Missions. The first was received so cordially, and has obtained such a wide circulation, that he is encouraged to plan for a number of them, believing that they will be specially useful in this particular period, and be a means of perpetuating a grateful remembrance of those who were in the vanguard of the missionary enterprise.

Referring to the times and labors of the first missionaries, Rev. J. N. Cushing, D. D., says: "The history of those days, with their lessons of undoubted faith, of firm trust in God for personal protection, and unflinching effort to lay some foundations for Christianity, is an inspiration which the Church cannot afford to lose."

The subject of this Memorial has received much less mention than her predecessor, but not for want of excellency of character nor of faithful and sacrificing service. The time of her employment was fully twenty years, and her service was of a very high character, both the intellectual and the spiritual. There is but one elaborate sketch of her life extant, and that one is out of print. The author acknowledges his indebtedness to it for material and inspiration with which to prepare his own sketch; while he has availed himself of some sources of information and means of interest not heretofore used, and has aimed to cast the light of events upon the instructive and beneficent life he portrays.

The literary talent of the heroine designedly appears; also that of her chief biographer, the charming story-writer, "Fanny Forester," who became the third wife of Dr. Judson.

Believing that he has performed a good work for the cause of Christ in placing the beautiful character of Sarah B. Judson before the churches in this form, he hopes for the verdict of a large circulation, particularly among the young.
