MY PETS.

THE old grandmother was always glad of a visit from her little grandchildren—Thomas and Mary. They could not go to see her very often; but when they went they were very happy. The good old lady talked to them very kindly, and told them stories; and when they went away she always had some little nice thing to give them. They were very kind and obedient to their grandmother, or she would not have loved them.

THE SICK BOY.

It is only by sickness that we learn to value the blessing of health. Diseases are God's servants, and are sent to do God's will. To be patient, when one is sick and in pain, is very hard. The only way to bear it is by looking to our Heavenly Father for strength. But when we have a good bed to lie on, when a kind mother is at hand to nurse us, and a loving brother or sister is ready to amuse us, we have reason to be very thankful to the kind Being who only can heal our sicknesses and make us well again.

FEEDING THE FOWLS.

One of the first things city children do when they go into the country is to feed the fowls. The city is no place for such creatures, as they cannot have the garden and fields and roads in which to pick up their food.

A brood of young chickens is an object of great delight to them, and to carry food to the old hen while she is confined to the coop seems to be a deed of charity, and like all such deeds, more than pays for the trouble of doing it. What a safe place the chickens find under the old hen's wings! Not safer than little children find in a good home.

MY NEW FRIEND.

Susan Price was a very gentle and obedient little girl, and much beloved by her parents and friends. She was very quiet and modest, and did not try to have many companions, and she was always glad to have her father and mother know who were her playmates. When she had made a new friend she was not easy till she had invited her to her home that her father and mother might see her and approve of her choice. If all children would do as Susan did, many sad friendships would be prevented.
