CATALOGUE

Most of the Books of Common Prayer and liturgies in general were printed in black-letter type until the beginning of the eighteenth century. Editions of this character in the following Catalogue are marked "black-letter." When the type is not specified it is understood that the book is printed in roman characters.

By size of page, e.g. 6 x 9 inches, is meant the page of type, including running head-lines, footnotes and catch-words, and marginal notes on either side of the text. The measure of the paper is added to designate the exact size of the book.

When pages are not indicated it is understood that the book is printed without pagination. In such instances, however, the number of leaves or of signatures is given in the case of early, rare editions. In all paginated editions the number of pages is stated. When in such editions the introductory section or an appendix is not folioed, the number of pages which it occupies is added in parentheses.

The binding is not mentioned except in the case of early editions, and then only when it is contemporary, or nearly so, with the issue of the book.
