Issued to Subscribers for the Year 1903.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are undernourished has increased from 600 million to 800 million (FAO 2001).

There are a number of reasons for this increase. One of the main reasons is the increase in the world population. The world population is expected to increase from 6 billion in 1999 to 9 billion in 2050 (FAO 2001). This increase in population will lead to an increase in the demand for food, which will lead to an increase in the number of people who are undernourished.

Another reason for the increase in the number of people who are undernourished is the increase in the number of people who are living in poverty. The number of people who are living in poverty has increased from 1 billion in 1990 to 2 billion in 2000 (FAO 2001). This increase in poverty will lead to an increase in the number of people who are undernourished.

A third reason for the increase in the number of people who are undernourished is the increase in the number of people who are living in rural areas. The number of people who are living in rural areas has increased from 3 billion in 1990 to 4 billion in 2000 (FAO 2001). This increase in rural population will lead to an increase in the number of people who are undernourished.

There are a number of ways in which the number of people who are undernourished can be reduced. One way is to increase the production of food. This can be done by increasing the number of people who are working in agriculture, by increasing the number of people who are working in food processing, and by increasing the number of people who are working in food distribution.

Another way to reduce the number of people who are undernourished is to increase the number of people who are living in poverty. This can be done by increasing the number of people who are working in the private sector, by increasing the number of people who are working in the public sector, and by increasing the number of people who are working in the non-profit sector.

A third way to reduce the number of people who are undernourished is to increase the number of people who are living in rural areas. This can be done by increasing the number of people who are working in agriculture, by increasing the number of people who are working in food processing, and by increasing the number of people who are working in food distribution.

There are a number of challenges that must be overcome in order to reduce the number of people who are undernourished. One of the main challenges is the increase in the world population. This increase in population will lead to an increase in the demand for food, which will lead to an increase in the number of people who are undernourished.
