I Beg leave herewith to prefent you, - not with a Ro-mance, because it is not fiction, - but with the Life of CERVANTES DE SAAVEDRA; to whom fuch extraordinary adventures happened, that were they told us from lefs respectable authority than that of the Spanish Academy, we should hardly be brought to give them credit.

SAAVEDRA's captivity, and its concentrat events, as bordering on the marvellous, form that part of his Hiftory which will most excite the attention of the ordinary Reader : but you, Madam, who cannot perufe a page of his admirable " QUIXOTE," without enthusiaftic rapturey you will be no lefs inquisitive about the minuteft circumstances of the Author's domestic Life.

Nothing, indeed, but the fondness with which his memory is cherifhed by all lovers of Literature, could warrant my obtruding on the Public, a Work otherwife fo infignificant : confifting only of a few pages, translated from a translation .- the fhadow of a fhade.

For although Mr. DE FLORIAN, the Translator out of the Spanish into French, has executed his task very ably, the knowing it to be but a version would deter almost any one of literary ambition from the yet humbler talk talk of turning that into Englith. And poffibly I myfelf might have been difcouraged from fuch an undertaking, had I not, upon my firit meeting with his Bock, chanced to compare it with the original; and, whether it was from my being to much more conversant with the French, than with the Spanish, or from Mr. DE FLOR. RIAN's manner of writing, and his little additions, it appeared to me more luftrous as it came out of his hands. At that time, however, being abroad, I had no thought of translating it: and it was not till very-lately, that, in relaxation of feverer fludies, which had brought upon me a fixed head-ache, I took to translating the agreeable ROMANCE of "GALATEE," to which the "LIFE OF CERVANTES," and the "REMARKS UPON HIS" WRITINOS," fland prefixed.

Ere I had finished it, I happily got rid of my headache; and therefore difinished my Doctor; --or, in parliamentary phrase, I threw "GALATEA" over the table; and if it is not abfolutely kicked out of the House; it is a business adjourned fine die.

If it were not interrupting the courfs of your fludics, of greater pith and moment, I could almost venture to recommend to your perusal Mr. DE FLORIAN'S "GA-LATEE." As it is the only pathoral Romance I ever read in my life, I cannot fpeak of its merit comparatively with that of others; but I think it exceffively pretty; by no means perfect; for it partakes of the common fault of all of the Novel Genus,—too much Lave. Of which, if I lament that there is fo much to be found in books, it is only because there is fo little to be found any where elfe.

Love, however, is not the fole fulgeft of the Romanov, but rural Manners; --pathoral Life, in general; of which, indeed, it may be faid (for it is fo in ARCADY, as well' as ( * ) us upon the banks of the TA10) that paffion is the vital principle.

"Landfcapes only I mean to paint; (fays the Au-"thor) and willage manners to defcribe. Te, whofe "bofoms are fraught with fenfibility, and whofe minds are uncorrupt;—ye, who religh the pleafures of a "country life;—to whom are grateful rural weaks, and the contemplation of nature;—ye, of pure bearts, to whom the melody of birds, or marmuring freams speak peaces lind me your attention, all: and may ye reap infruction, as well as plea-"fure."

The World is grown too populous, too luxurious, and too corrupt, I fear, ever to return to its primitive fimplicity i and there are thoulands, and thoulands, in every Metropolis in Europe, whom nothing lefs than a plague could drive into the country i although they are morally fure, flaying where they are, to lofe their health, and, perhaps, their lives, in purfult of fortunes or honours, which they never may obtain.

I have no very fanguine hope of awakening in fuch' infatuated perforts the diffates of reason and nature ryet I cannot refult the pleafure of transcribing one particular paffage, from Mr. DE FLORIAN, as a fort of abstract of rural happines. I shall give it in his own words, which are elegantly simple, as befits the subject. It is the opening of the second book of "GALATEA."

" Quand pourrai-je vivre au village ! Quand fe-" rai-je le possesseur d'une petite maison entourée de " cerifiers t Tout auprès servient un jardin, un ver-" ger, une prairie, et des ruches i un ruisseau bordé. " de noisettiers environneroit mon empire;-et mes " defirs ne passervient jamais ve ruisseau. Là, jé " coulerois

CERVANTES.

M ICHAEL DE CERVANTES SAA-VEDRA, whofe Writings have given celebrity to SPAIN, amufed all EUROPE, and improved the age in which he lived,—himfelf dragged on a miferable exiftence,—and died fcarcely regretted.

It is but very lately that the place of his birth has been afcertained. MA-DRID, SEVILLE, LUCHEN, and ALCALA, have feverally laid claim to him. B CER-

CERVANTES, as well as HOMER, CA-MOENS, and other illustrious men, has, fince his death, been held in the highest estimation, though he lived. almost in want of common necessaries.

The SPANISH ACADEMY, under the patronage of the KING, has at length thought proper to pay—to the memory of CERVANTES—thole honours which were fo juftly bis due. An Edition of ' DON QUIXOTE,' of unparalleled typographical fplendour, has been newly published. The EDI-TORS, having their national honour at heart, frem, by the extraordinary care, and expence beflowed upon the Work, defirous to atone for the flupid, and almost criminal neglect of the Author.

been very feduloufly collected, and wrought up by a diffinguifhed Member of the ACADEMY: from which it appears, he was of a Gentleman's family; being Son of Roderick De CERVANTES, and LEONORA DE COR-TINAS. He was born at ALCALA DE HENARES, a town in New CASTILE, the 9th day of October, 1547, in the reign of CHARLES THE FIFTH.

From his earlieft infancy he was fond of books. He fludied at MA-DRID, under a very eminent Profeffor: and foon diftinguished himfelf from the reft of his School-fellows, by his fuperior genius.

A proficiency in the Latin language, and an inlight into Theology, made up the learning of those days. His Parents intended him either for Phy-B 2 fic, (4) fic, or the Church; those two being the only lucrative professions then followed in SPASN: But, CERVANTES had this in common with many celebrated Poets,—he made verses in spite. of his Parents.

AN ELEOY on the death of QUEEN ISABELLA of VALOIS,—feveral SON-NETS,—and a POEM entitled FILENA, were his first productions. The indifferent reception these met with, feemed to our young Author such flagrant injustice, that he thereupon took the resolution of quitting his native Country; and went to settle at ROME. There penury constrained him to enter into the service of CAR-DINAL AQUAVIVA, in the humble capacity of Valet de Chambre.
