PREFACE

IN the following work various allusions are made to the results of modern criticism on the evidential value of the Bible. I have avoided, in the text, all appearance of speaking of these on my own authority; and the examples I have employed to illustrate them have been taken from critics and scholars, many of them Anglicans themselves, all of them devout in their sympathies, and all of them well known to Anglican students. I wish, moreover, to remind the reader that these examples are cited, not as proofs of the results in question, but merely as illustrations of them, which is a very different thing. If the reader takes exception to the examples given by myself, he must be aware that criticism will supply him with an indefinite number of others, the purport of which is similar. I have refrained from any attempt at elaborating critical details, and have confined myself to calling attention merely to results of the most general character; because I have desired to confine the discussion to the general facts of the situation, which are not affected by the minutiae of critical controversy, and with regard to which Anglicans of all schools, as I have shown by quotations from their writings, are in substantial agreement.

CONTENTS

CHAPTER I

	PAGE
On the want of perception amongst English Churchmen to-day that the true origin of all their existing dissensions is a certain new feature in the intellectual position of all of them . . .	1

CHAPTER II

The new feature in their intellectual position indicated by the desire of all parties to appeal from the decisions of the Reformers to ultimate proofs and authorities. The importance of this appeal illustrated by the growth of doctrinal differences	16

CHAPTER III

On the fact that, though all parties are appealing to ultimate authorities, they none of them realise the full importance of the appeal, or the intellectual circumstances of the present day, which condition it	33
---	----

CHAPTER IV

On the absolutely new position in which English Churchmen are placed intellectually by the admitted results of modern criticism of the Bible	46
--	----

CHAPTER V

The need for some doctrinal authority, other than the Bible, illustrated	61
--	----

CHAPTER VI

Concerning the three theories of the authority for Christian doctrine, advanced by the three doctrinal parties in the English Church. Are these theories even consistent with themselves?	76
