THE EVERGREEN NOVELS

Bound in uniform style with this volume. The following are now ready:—

A LONDON GIRL

Tales from the Great City. Anon. 1s. net.

The Bystander says:—"We have had many good things from Mr. Rivers in his year or so of publishing, and his new venture, 'Tales from the Great City,' promises to be one of the most striking amongst them."

CLOSED DOORS

Tales from the Great City. Anon. 1s. net.

The Scotsman says:—"As an argument the story is unanswerable, and since this is what was intended, no higher praise could be given it."

MRS. ERRICKER'S REPUTATION

Thomas Cobb, author of "The Amateur Emigrants," etc. 1s. net.

Punch says:—"It gives the Baron considerable pleasure to recommend this decidedly up-to-date novel."

A PIXY IN PETTICOATS

John Trevena, author of "Heather," "Furse the Cruel," etc. 1s. net.

The Daily Express says:—"The story is admirable, and it is excellently told. It holds the reader's interest to the last page."

THE HOUSE OF MERRILEES

Archibald Marshall, author of "Exton Manor," etc. 1s. net.

The Bookman says:—"It is a pleasure to praise a book of this kind, and rare to find one in which a narrative of absorbing interest is combined with so many literary graces."

PETER BINNEY, UNDERGRADUATE

Archibald Marshall, author of "The House of Merrilees," etc. 1s. net.

The Daily Mail says:—"Anyone who enjoys books of the 'Vice Versa' order may be recommended to get Mr. Archibald Marshall's story of University life, 'Peter Binney, Undergraduate.'"

HUGH RENDAL:

A PUBLIC SCHOOL STORY

Lionel Portman, author of "Hugh Rendal's Progress." 1s. net.

The Morning Post says:—"The book is an admirable study of school life; with only a few slight changes we could convert it into a correct account of certain years of the life of a school which certainly was not in Mr. Portman's mind when he wrote."

The Morning Post says:—"In style it suggests sometimes the Russian realistic novelists; in plan it is obviously inspired by Zola; in spirit it has some of the illuminating instinct of Balzac. As a work of art it is a notable achievement. As a social document it deserves the attention of all serious students of contemporary conditions of life. It is a book that should on no account be overlooked."

A LONDON GIRL.

Third Impression. 1s. net.

The BISHOP OF LONDON, addressing a meeting at the Northampton Institute, Finsbury, said: "I have lately been reading a story which interested and impressed me very much indeed. All you men ought to read it. It was called 'A London Girl.' The picture painted in it made a great impression on me, because I know from my own experience in rescue and preventive work that the story is literally true. It is the story of the downfall of hundreds of our girls in London to-day. The pitiful tale is not overdrawn; it is all too true."

"Certain it is that the author of this pitiless tale is neither ordinary nor inexperienced. 'Baby' is a great creation. She leaps from the printed page into lovely, merry life, and all through she exercises a spell over one."—Dundas Advertiser.

"We have had many good things from Mr. Alston Rivers in his year or so of publishing, and his new venture, 'Tales from the Great City,' promises to be one of the most striking amongst them."—Bystander.

"Moreover, he writes with a good deal more sympathy with human nature than is generally shown in studies of the kind, and with perhaps a truer feeling for the weakness of mankind and womanhood than one would expect to find. . . . As an argument the story is unanswerable, and since this is what was intended, no higher praise could be given to it."—Scotsman.

"He writes with a purpose. He conceals nothing; his strongest passages are absolutely true to life; but the influence of the book is wholly elevating."—Sheffield Telegraph.

"Apparently this work is to be followed by others in the same series of 'Tales from a Great City,' and no one can deny that they are the work of a writer of unusual talent."—British Weekly.

"Is a very strong and vivid study of an extremely painful subject. . . . The theme is so well handled that we cannot but regret the somewhat compressed treatment."—Westminster Gazette.

"The book compels admiration, and its sombre tone does not lower its interest. It warrants, in fact, considerable expectations of its unknown author."—Fall Mall Gazette.

"It is realism, but realism of a high order, and not of the gutter. . . . It is a powerful and convincing tale of the underside of London life."—Review of Reviews.

"This second volume still more convinces the reader of the power of the anonymous writer and the delicacy with which difficult subjects are dealt with in a manner which cannot offend."—Daily News.
