THE ASCENT
OF
BEN NEVIS
FROM BANAVIE HOTEL,
N.B.

See P. Winslow Cambridge

THE ASCENT OF BEN NEVIS

First Route.

THIS route is the only one thoroughly convenient for persons desiring to ride up the hill, as the road is suitable all the way. It is recommended to drive to the commencement of the mountain track. Cross the canal bridge opposite hotel door and proceed under railway arch across the moor by straight road to the suspension bridge. After crossing this, take to the right by public road till the stone bridge over the River Nevis is reached, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles farther on. Do not cross this, but take road to left. Follow this for some distance, till after passing a farm-house, when the mountain track comes into view. Once on the track, the only trouble is the length and steepness of it—it is plain to the top.

Second Route.

Follow first route to suspension bridge, then take to left past the "Long John" Distillery. Here a stone bridge crosses a stream. Get into the bed, if dry, of this stream, or on to the bank next distillery by any convenient method. It may be necessary for this purpose sometimes to go through or round the distillery buildings. Go below railway arch or over level crossing above, according to the size of the stream. The road then passes the distillery reservoir, and, a little after, a gate is met in the deer fence skirting the road at this point—go through this into the open. After getting into the open, follow the course of the stream—in bad weather do not attempt to leave it. A little after passing the deer fence the stream divides into two channels. Be sure to take the one to the right. It is a slightly circuitous route, and in places pretty boggy, but it is certain to bring you to the desired point above. The road, though boggy, is softer to the foot than the stony track. The stream should be followed till the lake is reached. Then cross the stream and take the left or southern shore of the lake, and keeping a little, 50 to 100 yards, above it, the shore being boggy, the regular track is seen near the farther end of the lake. This, of course, has just to be followed to the top. Of course, in perfectly clear weather the stream can be left as long as it is kept in sight, and a straighter course taken from the deer fence, making the string of the bow formed by the bend of the stream to the left. From the deer fence also, in clear weather, but then only, one may strike somewhat to the right across the moor, leaving altogether the stream, and making for the large gully on the steep green face seen to the right. (For continuation of this see third route below.)

Third Route.

This route should only be attempted in very fine weather. It is the shortest, and therefore the steepest. Follow first route to suspension bridge. There take the public road to the right. About a quarter of a mile farther on a bridge is seen on the left crossing the railway and leading on to the moor. Cross this and make for the large gully in the steep green face just opposite. Keep by this gully as far up as it goes. At the top of the steep part, about opposite the point where the rocks on the left side of the gully come nearest, there is a large stone or rock on the right side, on the top of which is to be seen the bench mark of the Geographical Survey. It is about 1000 feet above sea-level. Still keep up the gully till the plateau is reached. There hold just slightly to the right, the exact direction is between south and south-south-east, so as to cross the point of the spur thrown out in front by the green hill to the right. On no account mount the hill to the right, as it is an outlying point, and the descent on the other side has to be faced. Shortly after crossing this spur the lake is reached. Then follow same as second route from this point.

Scenery.

Going by the first route not much is seen till the upper part of the Ben is reached, the view below being blocked by the Ben itself on one side, and the hills across Glen Nevis on the other. On either of the other routes the view opens out
