PREFACE

THE materials for this little book have been gathered by slow degrees, and for several different purposes. The general scheme of the whole took shape for a course of Lectures, delivered in the Diocese of Salisbury for its Higher Religious Education Society. These were repeated at Westminster, on the invitation of the late Dean Bradley, and appeared verbatim in the Church Times. I have repeatedly declined to reprint them, their extemporaneous form being too unfinished. But part of the matter embodied in them had been written for a Lecture in Manchester Cathedral, and part was expanded and rewritten for a Sermon on the Ramsden Foundation before the University of Oxford. The whole was rewritten for the Church Quarterly Review, and appeared there in four instalments.¹ Some re-writing, piecing, and arrangement has taken place, and some other matter has been added; in especial, the portion on Method and Personality. This last formed the bulk of a paper read before the Brighton Church Congress in 1901.

The book now offered to the public may, therefore, whatever it is worth, be taken as embodying once for all its writer's settled convictions.
