TOMORROW

I

THE CONTRASTS OF THE FUTURE

MY DEAR FRIEND:

This morning your good letter came with its Berlin news. Of course, the word news is relative. The letter was more than ninety days under way and a good deal of history has been made between your writing and my reading it. Yet it was an unusual pleasure to hold your letter in my hand with its big label "Opened by the Censor." In those old, almost forgotten days of peace it seemed to me a matter of course that three times a week a large pile of European correspondence should come to my breakfast table. The mail from the fatherland did not awake more excitement than the daily newspaper. Now everything is changed. Nine-tenths of the letters addressed to me do not arrive at all; they are thrown overboard. And so the few
