I. ITS RELATION TO UNBELIEF.

"Behold, he prayeth."

It is hardly possible to dwell upon the wonderful contrast between the earlier and later periods in the life of St. Paul, their directly antagonistic character, his intense hatred of the Church, and his subsequent zeal, untiring labors and final martyrdom for the faith of Christ, and then read his own account, or that of St. Luke in the book of the Acts of the Apostles, of the cause of this change. without feeling that,
