WOMEN OF COLONIAL AND REVOLUTIONARY
TIMES. DOLLY MADISON

This volume, "Dolly Madison" by Maud (Wilder) Goodwin, is the fifth in a Heritage Series of reprints on early Virginia History.

Other volumes available are by Charles Campbell on the colony and ancient dominion of Virginia, William Stith's history of the discovery and settlement of Virginia and "Martha Washington" by Anne Hollingsworth Wharton.

The Virginia Series is part of a larger reprinting on the Colonial and Revolutionary period of the original Colonies. Over 40 volumes have been completed of a projected 100 or more.

In addition to these Virginia volumes, books are now available on Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Georgia, New Jersey, South Carolina and New York.

Also, "The Heads of Families, First Census of the United States, 1790," a 12-volume set covering all available records of the first census, is a part of this overall Series and is now available.

WOMEN OF COLONIAL AND REVOLUTIONARY TIMES

UNDER this general title Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons are publishing a series of six volumes, the aim of which is not only to present carefully studied portraits of the most distinguished women of Colonial and Revolutionary times, but to offer as a background for these portraits pictures of the domestic and social, instead of the political and other public, life of the people in successive periods of national development.

The project thus includes a series of closely connected narratives, vivid in color and of the highest social and historical value, of the manners and customs, the ways of life, and the modes of thought of the people of the Puritan, Knickerbocker, and Cavalier sections of the country from the days of the earliest colonists down to the middle of the present century. In the painting of these scenes use has been freely made of documents usually ignored as trivial by the historians or the biographer,—old letters, wills, inventories, bills, etc., from which have been gleaned many curious and interesting details of the daily life of the women of Colonial and Revolutionary days. Diaries, memoirs and autobiographies also—in fact, all sources have been drawn upon for material to add to the truthfulness and attractiveness of the picture.

The volumes are: "Eliza Pinckney", "Martha Washington", "Dolly Madison", "Margaret Winthrop", "Catherine Schuyler" and "Mercy Warren."
