CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTION.

THIS is a short study on a great subject. It is presented in this form in the hope of helping, in some degree, doubters who are sorry to be doubters, and who tell us that although they are unwilling to deny, they are unable to accept, the articles of dogmatic Christianity. All through I shall take leave to speak in the first person, not, however, in the spirit of egotism, but only because this seems to be the most simple, most free, most natural and convenient style when one friend is speaking to another, as now. Assuming, as a matter of course, that my antagonist in opinion is as sincere as I am, and as much wishes to be right as
