THE following pages have not been written to supply a long-felt want. They are not even published at the warm solicitations of a number of friends to whom the manuscript has been submitted. But they have been penned simply to gratify the author's cacoëthes scribendi; and are launched upon the literary sea with little promise of reaching the shores of popularity, but with the prospect rather of being becalmed amidst indifference and neglect, or of foundering beneath the storms of adverse criticism. Yet
