PREFACE.

GOWAN LIBRARY, 1938

THE materials of this Biography have been long laid by, awaiting the arrangement of far abler hands than mine.

To prevent a still greater delay, I have undertaken the work, not venturing to hope that I have supplied those who knew Mr. Hunt with a portrait which they will deem worthy of its subject, but anxious that the young men of my own generation should not be without the advantage of such a high example.

I claim a lenient criticism from Mr. Hunt's friends, on the ground of my having, to some extent, freshened their remembrance of one of the best men they ever knew; and other readers can afford to deal gently with my shortcomings, in consideration of the benefit I am permitted to confer upon them, by making them acquainted, however imperfectly, with a rare model of Christian excellence.
