TO THE READER.

THIS is my orchard, where the winds make laughter,
That jollity and fruit may follow after ;
Blossoms of promise in these pages find,
And fruit will gather in a merry mind :
For he who knows not when to bend and laugh
Has scarcely learnt philosophy by half ;
But he who mingles humour with his life,
Has found a cushion for a world of strife.
