PREFATORY NOTE

IN response to the request of the private audience present to hear the lectures upon which these articles are based, they have been expanded into a more permanent form. They are for the most part popular in character, being intended for the wide public interested in the general question of woman's position in industry rather than for students anxious to enforce the law. The latter are referred to "The Worker's Handbook," by Gertrude Tuckwell and Constance Smith (Duckworth and Co.).

It should be added that no general editorship of the volume has been exercised, and that each writer is responsible for her own opinions only.
