INTRODUCTION.

THE truth which is the subject of this book is altogether central. A larger . . . conception of Christ means a larger . . . conception of God, a larger conception of man, a larger conception of life, a clearer and more adequate perception of duty both to God and to our fellows.

The church's conception of her mission has been far too narrow. Her all-absorbing aim, when well enough awake to be in earnest, has been to bring individual souls into right relations with God, to rescue as many as possible from a wrecked and sinking world. It has hardly dawned upon her as yet that her commission includes the saving of the wreck itself, the quieting of its confusion and struggle, the relief of its wretchedness, a deliver-
