MADISON CAWEIN

THE POET AND NATURE; AND, THE MORNING ROAD

Dr. Mullins says of Madison Cawein's work:

"Deep in us all is the love of nature. We need the imagination of the poet to restore to nature her aureole, to transfigure her with subtle meanings, to interpret for us the flight of setting suns and the round ocean. If the world would read Mr. Cawein's exquisite nature poems more generally and appreciatively, can any one doubt that our love of our great Commonwealth would be purified and elevated? There is a hoard of glorious gold, although not of the ordinary sordid kind, awaiting those who heed the 'Call of the Road.'

"As we follow we shall visit the tents where the tribes of beauty dwell, and see the wild-eyed girl of Spring awaking."

E. Y. MULLINS, D. D., L. L. D., Editor in Chief; in "The Review and Expositor", a Baptist Theological Quarterly, October, 1914.
