PREFACE.

IT has been a regret expressed by many that an enlarged collection of anecdotes and forcible words by Mr. MOODY has not been published. With the present volume I have endeavored to supply that need, and in it will be found many "Arrow words, which kindle as they fly." Seeing that Messrs. MOODY and SANKEY are fellow-laborers in the gospel, it has been deemed to be only just that the "Story of the Great Revival," wrought chiefly through their instrumentality, should be briefly recorded here, and also a short biography of the men who were such devoted leaders.

The religious movement, conducted by Messrs. MOODY and SANKEY in the chief cities of Great Britain and Ireland, during the years 1873-4-5, in many respects stands unparalleled in the history of revivals, and their visit will long be held in grateful and loving remembrance by thousands. To many it was the occasion of an awakening to spiritual life from the death of sin—a deliverance from the bondage of Satan into the light and liberty of God's salvation. To many others, already in possession of religious life, it proved a time of quickening and renewed consecration of body, soul, and spirit to the service of the Redeemer. It was also the means and opportunity of drawing together, in a way not often seen before in this country, Christian men and women of various denominations, who seemed to forget their differences in one common object—the salvation of men.

To Christian workers in the pulpit, platform, school, or class-room, it is hoped these pages will prove of valuable service, and aid them in bringing home to the hearts of their charge the grand truths of Christianity.

May the circulation of this volume greatly promote the work of Christ in the world, which those devoted Evangelists have so deeply at heart.

JOHN LOBB.
