FOREWORD

u. c. 13

I have seen no other utterances so clearly setting forth the attitude of the German-born American as those that are here presented. Mr. Kahn writes with a knowledge of German conditions,—the ambitions, the capacities and the history of the German people. He drives home the strength of the American position in a manner that makes an irrefutable argument for the righteousness of this nation's attitude. His view is more than American, it is international, a view that looks to the consequences to the world if the things done by Germany and the spirit which now controls her go without check. Indeed,
