PREFACE

I can tell you best what this book is by telling you first what it is not.

It is not a learned essay. It is not an exhortation. It is neither profound, like a doctoral thesis, nor passionate, like a reformer's appeal.

If it is what I have tried to make it, this book is human and helpful.

It is in the belief that at least several persons will be found who like to read, and like to read about reading, that this little book has been made. They will please regard it not as an instructive work, but as an essay at friendly suggestion; and will look into it not for conclusive utterance, but for counsel; not for the answer to every inquiry, but for stimulus to the inquiring faculty.
