TABLE OF CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

Diffusion of the Jews throughout the Roman empire at the period of our Lord's birth and ministry—Testimony of Philo, and of the "Acts of the Apostles"—Conflux of the subjects of the empire to Rome as a great maritime capital—Multitudes of Gauls and Germans congregated there, as well as of Jews—The Jews, introduced by Pompeius as slaves, increase and multiply there—The influence they exert upon the citizens, and especially upon women—Diffusion of their Scriptures, and of Jewish religious ideas and usages—The Pollio of Virgil refers to Isaiah—The Jews occupy a special locality at Rome ..... page 1

CHAPTER II.

Great numbers of Jews dispersed abroad—Vast multitudes that came to Jerusalem for the Passover—Miracle of the Day of Pentecost reported abroad on their return—The Gospel first brought to Rome by the converts of St. Peter, and his name associated with the foundation of the Church in that city—No authority for the tradition that St. Peter founded that Church himself—Fresh arrival of believers at Rome after the first persecution at Jerusalem—Early preaching of Jesus Christ at Rome—Differences among the Jewish residents in the city—The Christians associate with themselves many Gentiles ..... page 19

CHAPTER III.

- St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, dated from Corinth, A.D. 58—
 The teaching of this epistle, asserting the insufficiency both of the Jewish and the Moral Law—Justification by faith—
 Acceptance of the Gentiles—Dissatisfaction of the uncon-verted Jews at Rome—Jewish intrigues against Paul in Palestine—Proceedings of the Roman government against him—He appeals to Cæsar, and is sent to Rome—His voyage and arrival at Puteoli—He is conducted to the city, and kept there in custody in "his own hired house"
 —He confers with members of the Jewish community, and continues "to preach the Lord Jesus with all confidence" ..... page 38

CHAPTER IV.

- Succession of Nero on the death of the Emperor Claudius, A.D.
 54—His early dissipation and crimes—Jealousy of the Roman nobles—The emperor relies on his bodyguard for protection—Institution of the prætorians—Augustus had encouraged the deification of the emperor as a stroke of policy—The hostility of the nobles kept in check by fear of their slaves—Outward revival of religion by Augustus—Restoration of the temples—Symptoms of a corresponding moral revival ..... page 55

CHAPTER V.

- The Romans had become familiar with the principle of monarchical government—Views of the equality and fraternity of man derived from the Macedonian conquests—Doctrine of the unity of mankind, and their derivation from a common stock—Imperfect conception of the Greek philosophers, from Pythagoras to Zeno and the Stoics—Unity of God—Monotheism triumphs over Polytheism—Augustus revives ceremonial worship as a compromise between religion and unbelief ..... page 75

CHAPTER VI.

- Development of the new Stoicism, or ethical teaching under the early empire, favoured by Augustus—The two Sextii, father and son, and other teachers of this school, Celsus, Crassitius, Fabianus, Sotion, Metronax, Attalus—Seneca, the philosopher, attaches himself to them—Jealousy of Tiberius, and persecution of the philosophers—Ethical teaching of Seneca—His imperfect conception of the Deity of Providence, and of a future state—Man, in his view, remains independent of God—His moral aspirations are devoid of any external sanction ..... page 88

CHAPTER VII.

- Confinement of St. Paul at Rome—Epistles from thence to Philemon, to the Colossians, the Ephesians, and the Philippians—Different meanings assigned to the word πατρώριον: the "palace" of the emperor, or his praetorian guard—The former to be preferred—Compare the phrase, "Caesar's household," and the names of attendants discovered in the imperial columbaria—Question of St. Paul's intercourse with Seneca, determined in the negative by comparison of St. Paul's teaching with Seneca's tenets on the subject of the divine nature, of the unity of man, and of sin ..... page 105

CHAPTER VIII.

- Question of St. Paul's release from a first captivity in the year 63—His supposed journey into Spain of no historical authority—His later journeys in the East; and presumed absence from Rome at the time of the great fire—Burning of Rome—Destruction caused by it, and moral effect of the overthrow of the old Pagan temples, compared with the Fire of London ..... page 129

CHAPTER IX.

Nero suspected of causing the fire—His attempts to avert the suspicion, and persecution of the Christians—Question whether the persecution was directed, in the first instance, against the Christians or the Jewish residents generally—Obscurity of the Christian sect at Rome at this period—Supposed conversion of Pomponia Græcina, and of Martial's Pudens and Claudia not to be relied on—Evidence of Tacitus and Suetonius considered—Statement in the pretended correspondence of Paul and Seneca, that Jews and Christians were both included in the persecution—No authority for a general persecution of Christians throughout the empire ..... page 147

CHAPTER X.

Conspiracy of the nobles against Nero, and death of Seneca, A.D. 65—Rebellion of the Jews in Palestine, A.D. 66—St. Paul at this time in Spain or Asia—Nero in Greece—St. Paul arrested possibly at Nicopolis in Epirus and sent to Rome—No indications from his Epistles to Timothy and Titus, nor from St. Peter's Epistle, of a general persecution—Question of St. Peter visiting Rome, and meaning of his date, "Babylon"—Tradition of the martyrdom of St. Peter and St. Paul on the same day at Rome, i.e., in June (9th or 11th), A.D. 68—Little reliance to be placed on it—Concluding reflections on the effect of St. Paul's preaching at Rome ..... page 157
