

OUT OF THE PAST:
SOME BIOGRAPHICAL
ESSAYS, VOL. II

Published @ 2017 Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd

ISBN 9780649222360

Out of the past: some biographical essays, Vol. II by Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff

Except for use in any review, the reproduction or utilisation of this work in whole or in part in any form by any electronic, mechanical or other means, now known or hereafter invented, including xerography, photocopying and recording, or in any information storage or retrieval system, is forbidden without the permission of the publisher, Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd, PO Box 1576 Collingwood, Victoria 3066 Australia.

All rights reserved.

Edited by Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd.
Cover @ 2017

This book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, re-sold, hired out, or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form or binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser.

www.triestepublishing.com

SIR MOUNTSTUART E. GRANT DUFF

OUT OF THE PAST:
SOME BIOGRAPHICAL
ESSAYS, VOL. II

OUT OF THE PAST

OUT OF THE PAST
SOME BIOGRAPHICAL ESSAYS

BY THE RIGHT HON.
SIR MOUNTSTUART E. GRANT DUFF
G.C.S.I., F.R.S.
AUTHOR OF "NOTES FROM A DIARY"

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LIBRARY

IN TWO VOLS.—VOL. II

48735

NEW YORK
E. P. DUTTON & CO.

LONDON
JOHN MURRAY

1903

D A
562
G 76
V. 3

CONTENTS

	PAGE
WALTER BAGEHOT: HIS LIFE AND WORKS, 1826-1877. (Address to the Social and Political Education League)	1
THE LIFE OF ARTHUR STANLEY, 1815-1881. (From The National Review , 1894)	35
MATTHEW ARNOLD, 1822-1888. (Address to the Richmond Athenæum, 1890)	68
LORD ARTHUR RUSSELL, 1824-1892. (From The Journal of the Royal Geographical Society , 1892)	112
COUNT DE HÜBNER, 1811-1892. (From The Academy , April 11, 1891)	129
HENRY REEVE, 1813-1895. (From The Spectator , October 22, 1898)	145
THE DUKE OF ARGYLL, 1823-1900. (From the Banffshire Journal of May 8, 1900)	155
THE EMPRESS FREDERICK, 1840-1901 (August, 1902)	163
THE MARQUESS OF DUFFERIN AND AVA, 1826-1902. (From The British Empire Review , April, 1902)	172
THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY, 1826-1902. (From The Spectator , 1902)	182
LORD ACTON, 1834-1902. (From The Spectator , July 5, 1902)	188
ADDRESS TO THE ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN (Friday, January 27, 1899).— Epitaphs	199

OUT OF THE PAST

WALTER BAGEHOT: HIS LIFE AND WORKS

THE nineteenth century is passing away amidst a return current which bids fair to engulf not a few of the best gifts it won for humanity. That being so, I think we might do worse than look back to the lives of some of those who illustrated it while it was still strong and hopeful.

When you did me the honour to ask me to deliver this address, I thought of several such men—of Bastiat, of Cobden, and of Sir Louis Mallet. Finally, however, I settled upon Walter Bagehot, who died too early to allow him to become known to the majority of his countrymen; but who was loved and revered by many of the best minds in his generation. The best memorials of a man of letters are almost always his own books; and lengthy biographies of those, whose lives have been eventful only in the works they have produced, are not to be commended. It is, however, extremely useful that writers, in full possession of the necessary information and in sympathy with the persons to be described, should range in order the main facts of their lives and give them to the world. Such biographies, if well done, are of infinite service to those who propose to read the books themselves, and in this case the necessary work has been quite admirably done by the late Richard Holt Hutton, one of the ablest essayists, as well as one of the best men, who has lived in our times, and who knew him of whom he wrote from his youth upwards.

Walter Bagehot was born on the 3rd of February 1826 at Langport, a little town in Somersetshire, and was the son of Mr. Thomas Watson Bagehot, for thirty years Managing Director and Vice-Chairman of Stuckey's Banking Company, then and now an institution of first-rate importance in Western England. His father being an Unitarian, he was not sent to Oxford, but to University College, London, where he and Hutton met when neither of them was over seventeen. They soon became intimate, and discussed with all the vehemence of gifted youth "the immensities and eternities" no less than the "problems that perplexed the land," problems which, as it was the hour of the beneficent movement inaugurated by Villiers and Cobden, turned the minds of both the fellow-students towards Political Economy.

Bagehot had naturally very high spirits and great capacity for enjoyment, as is easily seen by any one who reads his works carefully. Bad health, however, very much tamed his spirits in later life, and those who only knew him when he had come to full maturity would not, without Mr. Hutton's testimony, have believed him to have been in his youth passionately fond of hunting. He distinguished himself very much at the University of London, taking the Mathematical Scholarship with his B.A. degree in 1846, and the gold medal for Intellectual and Moral Philosophy with his M.A. in 1848. For seven or eight years the Catholic Church had a great fascination for him; but it is improbable that he ever was at all near conversion. He was intimately acquainted with Newman's writings, and was especially attached to his University Sermons and to the poems in the Lyra Apostolica, hardly sufficiently known to the present day, though far more valuable than a great many of their author's more elaborate performances. His biographer cites in illustration of his Catholic velleities a rough but vigorous poem and an admirable bit of prose, dismissing the subject with the words :—

“It is obvious, I think, both from the poem, and from these reflections, that what attracted Bagehot in the Church of Rome was the historical prestige and social authority which she had accumulated in believing and uncritical ages for use in the unbelieving and critical age in which we live—while what he condemned and dreaded in her was her tendency to use her power over the multitude for purposes of a low ambition.”

While Bagehot was reading law and hesitating between the Bar and the Bank, he made the acquaintance of a man who had a greater fascination for him than had any of his contemporaries. This was Arthur Hugh Clough, at that time Principal of University Hall, a most remarkable person, who died before he had done for the world all that his friends expected. I remember Dean Stanley telling me, when his acquaintance was already pretty large, that no one had ever impressed him so much as a man as Clough had impressed him as a boy; and a hardly less striking testimony to his powers was given me by Stanley's successor in the Deanery of Westminster, who told me that, when he went to Rugby, a boy who looked after him on his first day there, said: "What a fool you were not to come here three days ago; then you might have said that you had been at school with Clough!" The speaker was destined to a very different fame from that of Dean Stanley, for he was Hodson, of Hodson's Horse!

My own acquaintance with Clough was very slight, but it belonged to the same period of his life as that in which he came to know Bagehot, and I can quite understand the influence he exercised. Bagehot and he had been born, I think, with somewhat of the same temperament; but the Arnoldine influence had been exerted on Clough too early, and over-stimulation had led to the reaction which gave point to the saying about him, that "he thought nothing